The number of food halls in California has nearly tripled in the last five years—here are some of the latest additions

The place

COOKHOUSE FOOD HALL

Temecula

Why go

Opened in an 1800s Vail Ranch building decked out with antique leather horse halters and vintage wooden doors, this is the perfect year-round spot to eat outside after a day of wine tasting.

Eat this

Try the taquitos or taco combo plates at plant-based Mexican eatery Amo Nakat! Asada, or order the pulled pork with cornbread and pimento cheese at barbecue company The Smok'd Hog.

PUBLIC MARKET

Emeryville

This food hall is one of many incredible San Francisco Bay Area markets; over the last year it expanded to include nearly 20 vendors.

Taste your way around the world, from authentic Palestinian fare (falafel, shawarma) at Mama Lamees to the classic Japanese noodle soup at Shiba Ramen.

STEELCRAFT

Bellflower (with locations in Long Beach and Garden Grove)

Built in repurposed shipping containers, Steelcraft's three locations feature craft beer and local food vendors in a pet- and family-friendly urban space.

Pair a Fritzi Coop fried chicken sandwich with a Ten Mile Brewing pint, and save room for a scoop (or two) of Burnt Caramel at Long Beach Creamery.

THE ANNEX

Oxnard

Ventura County's first food hall, built amid a collection of stores, hosts fun events like trivia nights, makers markets, and workshops with local artists.

Try the signature rice bowls at Seoul Sausage, the Korean links purveyor that won Season 3 of The Great Food Truck Race on the Food Network.

FOOD LAB

Riverside

From raw juice to brick-oven pizza, choose from 14 artisanal eateries, then take your food next door for an arcade or VR night at the Riverside Game Lab.

Snack on a Truffle Shuffle charcuterie board with a craft brew at Beerfarm, then taste the soup made from the owner's secret recipe at Soho Ramen.

LITTLE ITALY FOOD HALL

San Diego

Rated as one of the country's 10 best new food halls by USA Today, this Little Italy spot offers a full bar and six food stations adjacent to an open-air piazza.

Order a Spritz Flight at the Food Hall Bar, build your own pizza at Ambrogio15, or sample the innovative tacos (like Mashed Potato) at Not Not Tacos.
